THIS SUNDAY —August 7 & Beyond

"A City Founded on Faith"

Chapter 11 of the Letter to the Hebrews brings us the topic of faith, which is the main theme of what being a follower of Jesus actually means.

Contrary to what many modern writers and movie scripters would like to make us believe, true faith is not about "a blind leap into the unknown" or a stubborn trust in some entity, whether human or supernatural.

This is the way the writer of Hebrews describes true faith: "the assurance of things hoped for, the conviction of things not seen."

Notice the use of the words assurance and conviction to depict our faith in God.

Immediately after this, the writer also uses the term understand, when affirming that "by faith we understand that the world was created by the word of God, so that what is seen was made out of things which do not appear."

In other words, faith is not necessarily opposed to our reasoning or our common sense. It does require that we trust our Creator though, that we believe in His very being (I have never liked the word existence to refer to God, but rather to all that God has created. I would rather say that God IS.), and in His loving care of us.

To make his point clearer, the writer of Hebrews gives examples of faithful men of the past and their righteousness towards God and their fellow human beings. Among those mentioned we have Abel, Enoch, Noah, and finally Abraham. He also points out how they all trusted in God's promises, even though they did not see the promise fulfilled in their lifetime (except in the case of Enoch, who was taken up by God Himself.)

What all these characters have in common, according to the writer of Hebrews, is that through faith they were able to please God, and fulfill the mission that God had assigned them, whose real fruits in many cases was only visible many generations later, as in the case of Abraham.

None of these great men of the past based their faith on the false hope that God would spare them from harsh times or even death (Enoch did not foresee that God would spare him from death). In most cases, being faithful to God for them meant doing things that others would consider illogical or unlikely.

When Noah started building the ark, the rest of the people laughed at him and did not believe there would be a devastating flood.

When Abraham started his journey towards the unknown land that God told him to go to, he was quietly leading a good life in Ur.

But these people did not base their faith on a senseless blind trust. They had the inner conviction and assurance that God was real and understood that His word was to be trusted.

They also understood what their role was. They saw themselves as strangers and exiles on the earth. Their aim was not to return to the place they had come from, but to seek a homeland, a better country, "a heavenly one", as the writer of Hebrews puts it.

And God has prepared for them, as for us who follow Him in trust, a city founded on faith.
